Unlimited Access Option Bullying is defined as intentional acts of a repeated form of aggression, retaliation, or otherwise harmful behavior by one or more persons which damage the dignity, integrity, and/or self-image of another person, or induce in or cause fear of harm or illness in that person. Bullying is socially accepted as a “rite of passage” in the adolescent years of gender-identified and gender-expressed students. Bullying is an intense, pervasive, persistent, and one-sided campaign of behavior directed against a specific person that is repeated on a day-to-day, weekly, or monthly basis, for a period of time. Bullying is generally separated into four categories: physical or active, relational, verbal, and cyberbullying. Physical Bullying refers to behaviors that injure the body, such as pushing, hitting, kicking, biting, and stealing, that can be inflicted intentionally by direct contact or indirectly by pushing or tripping in the presence of the victim. Physical bullying can also include teasing, teasing with physical contact, and teasing in the presence of a third person. Physical bullying is a common form of bullying. It is a form of behavior characterized by the repeated infliction of power, injury, and pain. Bullying is often associated with boys, although girls have been known to bully, as well. Physical bullying is more common in boys than in girls, and it is more prevalent in the United States than in other countries. Relational Bullying refers to behaviors that violate another person's right to have friendships, to not be teased, or to not be socially isolated. Relational bullying can also include acts of ostracism, threats of injury, exclusion, rumors, and social rejection and isolation. Relational bullying may include teasing, harassment, exclusion, name-calling, rejection, and exclusion from groups. It can be damaging not only to the victimized individuals but also to their peers and even entire peer groups. Relational bullying occurs at higher frequencies in boys than in girls. Punishment of girls for speaking out against relational bullying is not uncommon. Verbal Bullying refers to verbal behaviors targeted at a person such as insulting, threatening, and intimidating verbal behaviors, and/or non-verbal behaviors such as mockery, mockery with physical contact, and gestures, as well as commenting and gossiping. Verbal bullying can also include the denial of information, lying, spreading lies, deliberately limiting another person's options to participate in activities, and ba244e880a
